THE KEEPER (Part 2 of 2) KC Hall

It is all or Nothing in this final showdown with an ancient force that few have fought and were lucky enough to have lived to tell the tale. Bran's sister had not been one of those lucky few. So, it would make sense that to follow in her footsteps would be suicide, right? Then why is it the best, and might I add, the only plan that will work?

Darkness crawls across the land and the fate of the sidhe is close at hand and the Nothing is creeper ever closer. Aer and her friends have to save the sidhe world, but really, it is all up to Aer. It is a responsibility most would never even dream of undertaking but the honor has been thrust upon her and it is sink or swim.

With the help of creatures that shouldn't be real, she will undertake a task that no one has succeeded at to date in order to save a kingdom she had never known truly existed, and in doing so, save a whole other world, but when the darkness begs for death, what is a girl to do? Grant its wish? Does the Light bow to the dark, or the dark bow to the light? Does daylight eat the shadows? No one can say because no one knows, and you can only follow along as the story unfolds.
