Episode five in Season One of Ileandra Young's multi-season paranormal thriller 'Dead And Alive'

When Michael wakes from fitful sleep he knows everything has changed forever.

Stephanie is gone.

Though he longs for a moment of quiet and reflection, the chance is denied him when he realises that his hospital room has become a war zone.

The man guarding his door has little comfort, just a grim smile, tight fingers around the butt of an automatic rifle and a silent promise that Michael's problems are far from over.

Enter Gordon Hughes, a tall, commanding figure who appears to have all the answers. He instructs Michael to come with him and his companions in order to be safe. Michael has other ideas.

Sick of the fear, the discomfort and the pain, Michael takes a stand and demands answers. But, as Hughes prepares to tell all, Michael must decide if he really is prepared for the truth.

Here continues the multi-season story arc starring three distinct and passionate characters: Diavian Hatara, Kailah Turner and Michael Garran.

Watch their lives each thread in and out of the others, often colliding with devastating consequences. Follow their stories as they come face to face with forces of which the everyday world regularly denies knowledge.

Witness three souls search for the answer to a single, simple question: 'What does it mean to be dead and alive?'
