In 1947, Ashley's life of hell began when her mother's new boyfriend decided she wasn't enough for him sexually. The physical and sexual abuse against young Ashley was frequent and violent. Ashley was not allowed to tell anyone about her horrendous circumstances because the families' main house rule was, "What happens at home, stays at home." Ashley's heart yearned to be free. When she got the opportunity to escape the hell she called home, she bravely took it. Remembering how her mother allowed the abuse to happen, Ashley built up hatred in her soul towards her. Vowing never to allow her children to endure what she experienced. Sadly, one day, the realization of her life's path was clear. Ashley had become just like the very person she loathed. She had become like her mother. Lost in the same cycle of abuse and neglect with her own children, placing them in the same hell she managed to escape. Is she stuck in a generational curse? Can Ashley and her children be set free, or is their destiny sealed?
