Wanting to have a healthy relationship is normal. A need to be secure and to be accepted by another is nurtured as early as infancy after the bond of a mother and father with their children. Throughout a lifetime one grows up being exposed to the world and behaviors are learned. Choices are made to how to respond to life's experiences. Not all relationships, be it intimate, social, or even between family members exist with security and love. These poems reflect different experiences in unfulfilled expectations or desires. For those who have experienced anything unworthy and undesirable, these poems represent many ways one may not get what they want in relationships. There is a certain level of hope and expectation, but some people do not have share the same hopes and anticipation. Know that one is not alone in such an experience; understanding comes through proper communication.
