Dust jacket notes: "Before religion became 'morality touched with emotion' it was the emotion itself, or a group of emotions, and it still is. Those emotions are, in the translator's summary, 'the feeling of the 'uncanny', the thrill of awe or reverence, the sense of dependence, of impotence, or of nothingness, or again, the feelings of religious rapture and exaltation'. The author of the present book calls them the non-rational feelings, the sense of the tremendous, the awful, the mysterious, or, in a word of his own coining, 'the numinous'. Both author and translator make it clear that religion must accommodate both the numinous and the ethical. The Idea of the Holy is a book which has established itself, since this translation first appeared [in 1923], as a classic in its subject. In the present edition the translation has been revised in a few details and the whole re-set. The translator has added a memoir of the author, who died in 1937."
