The Last Hurrah The Edge of Sadness Edwin O'Connor

2 novels in one volume. The Last Hurrah is the story of the Irish immigrant in the American city and his grasp on politics as the only ladder out of the slums. Written with true sympathy and warm, impulsive humor, the novel unfold much about Irish life and politics in America, about loyalty and hatred, about the evolution of a big city, about what makes a follower and what makes a leader. Its hero, Frank Skeffington, is one of the memorable characters of modern fiction - half hero, half rascal, a legend in his own time. - Winner of the Atlantic Prize. The Edge Of Sadness is a buoyant and deeply moving story of a middle-aged priest, and the several worlds in which he finds himself - the exuberant, turbulent, bubbling Irish-American world in which he was born and raised, and the far different, somber, silent, shabby world to which his life has taken him. It is a portrait, told with truth and sympathy, of the day-to-day life of a priest, and, as well, a rich cross section of secular and religious life. Comedy and pathos, love and despair, loneliness and compassion, a sense of human longing and of human frailty makes this novel unforgettable. - Winner of the Pulitzer Prize.
